

To whom it may concern.

I would have preferred to respond to the commissions invitation on NZs performance relative to other zones via your format but due to the complexities of trying to comply with it, I wish to submit via this email.

No country can concentrate on efficiency when it is constantly being distracted by an agenda of social rupture.

To be spending the enormous amounts of the nations treasure on producing a virtual duplicate in two languages on every announcement and signage is leading to a complete breakdown of a stable society.

The people that you rely on for your income do not need all the confusion and frustration that the agenda the commission is helping to push.

To suggest that the producer must become more efficient when at the same time the commission is loading up the cost to the same person with novelties that do little more than employ more state employees is a great contradiction.

If the commission is genuine in its attempt to encourage efficiency it will have to lead by example. Asking the producer to do more while the commission wastes time and someone else's money , placing millstones around their necks that are no benefit on the international scene, will never see improvements in efficiency.
